Construction at Stanford. Stanford will be replacing the roof on its original building over the next few weeks. Tomorrow morning starting at 7 am, there will be a crane in front of the building on the Connecticut Avenue side to hoist materials on to the roof. The lift itself should take less than two hours, and they expect to be finished and off the site well before noon. The sidewalk and the parking lane in front of the building will be closed during the operation, and there will be people to direct pedestrians and drivers.
